ADVENTURER OF THE YEAR

Kilian Jornet arrived to Everest base camp with the objective of getting a Fastest Known Time (FKT) for an up and down trip of the world's tallest mountain from the Tibetan side. Jornet reached Everest's summit twice within a single week, first on May 22, then again on May 27. Both times he climbed solo, without the use of supplemental oxygen, without fixed ropes, and without reliance on supplies or support.

Climbing Everest without oxygen twice in the same week has been done once before, in 2007 by Pemba Dorje Sherpa, whose ascents were seven days apart.

However, Jornet had food poisoning, which slowed him down, especially above 7,000 meters. He had diarrhea, vomiting, but he knew it wasn't going to kill him .

Emotional control is very important," says Jornet, "especially in mountaineering. Euphoria can be just as dangerous as fear. You can be happy, but you need to be able to really not listen to these emotions when making decisions to keep going.

Since he was a kid, recovery was one thing he was very good at. His parents were mountaineers and he climbed mountains at the age of three in Spain with his family. He has a passion for moving in the mountains.

He is the most dominating endurance athlete of his generation. In just eight years, Jornet has won more than 80 races, claimed some 16 titles and set at least a dozen speed records, many of them in distances that would require the rest of us to purchase an airplane ticket. He has run across entire landmasses (Corsica) and mountain ranges (the Pyrenees), nearly without pause. He regularly runs all day eating only wild berries and drinking only from streams.
